Connak will immediately give warning, pointing out the wolves. He'll fire an arrow at the furthest wolf since the line of sight appears clear...

Short BowAttack: 24 Damage: 7

... then move his entire movement back towards the party (Left 5, Up 1).

Tabesha'l felt a small tinge of surprise: why would two wolves take on a full party of two-legs ? This whole thing was wrong, as she knew the shy nature of these creatures, who often would rather run and hide than confront humanoids, especially near settlements. Could it be that the dragon already devoured or drove away all the local game... ? For certain, she'd never seen wolves of such an aggressive nature, except during exceedingly harsh winters.

She knew she soon wouldn't have the luxury to reflect further on these subtleties, however, and so she took a steady position with both legs firmly planted on the road, as she uttered the incantation and formed the arcane symbols she would need to protect herself from the two rabid, desperate beasts. As she felt the magical barrier rise around her, she slowly but steadily backed away from the wolves, retreating behind the rest of the group and concentrating on her next spell.

 Casting Mage Armor on herself as an Action and moving 30 feet back up the road. ***

As Barric hears Connak's warning, he knocks an arrow to his bow, the manticores pushed to the back of his mind for now. Seeing Tabesha'l retreat behind, he stands his position in front of her, watching Vaxis getting his shield up and Brutus ready to move into the fray. He can barely see the shapes moving behind the brush, and holds his aim steady, waiting for a clearer shot.

No movement. Readyng a longbow attack when a wolf is not behind the cover of the trees. If triggered, 22 Damage: 11
