

Input Question:

When was the parliament formed in the uk?

Passage 1: Title (So) - Parliament of the United Kingdom Click to hide

- S1. The Royal and Parliamentary Titles Act 1927 formally amended the name to the "Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland", five years after the secession of the Irish Free State in 1922.
- S2. With the global expansion of the British Empire, the UK Parliament has shaped the political systems of many countries as ex-colonies and so it has been called the "Mother of Parliaments".
- S3. However, John Brightwho coined the epithetused it in reference to the political culture of "England" rather than just the parliamentary system.
- S4. In theory, the UK's supreme legislative power is officially vested in the Crown-in-Parliament.
- S5. However, the Crown normally acts on the advice of the Prime Minister and the powers of the House of Lords are limited to only delaying legislation; thus power is "de facto" vested in the House of Commons.
- S6. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was created on 1 January 1801, by the merger of the Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland under the Acts of Union 1800.
- S7. The principle of ministerial responsibility to the lower House did not develop until the 19th century—the House of Lords was superior to the House of Commons both in theory and in practice.
- S8. Members of the House of Commons (MPs) were elected in an antiquated electoral system, under which constituencies of vastly different sizes existed.

Reference Response:

The parliament formed in the UK was initially called Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland but the Royal and Parliamentary Titles Act 1927 formally amended the name to the "Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland", five years after the secession of the Irish Free State. Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was created on 1 January 1801, while the parliament formed in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was created on 11 November 1920.
