

Example

Watchword sublime of Rome's imperial sage
Tersest of synonyms for self control
Paramount precept of the stoic 's age
Noblest of mottoes for the lofty soul

Would thou wert writ in characters of light
At every turn to greet my reverent gaze
And bid me face life 's evils, calm, upright
Unspoiled alike by calumny or praise

With all our science we are slaves of fate
What is to come we know not, cannot know
Grief, suffering, death,— all touch us soon or late
The master question, how to meet the blow

Grant me, ye gods, through life a steadfast eye
And then, with equanimity, to die

SongNet

The silent muse o'er the sacred west
The turrets of the western sea
The long nuns the first did shine
The whirling o'er the distant garden took

And the green water o'er the sable shore
Of the mountain heights of his watery train
With this side on his limbs her, he, declare
Then did his head he goes

Here cried he came his ancient close was old
And now the fair as the sky. the old shore
He, he, who, “ and he was that he trod
He stood by, he lived he knew this

He spoke, in the ‘ t is there were known
Is like, and now, was seen

ChatGPT

Beneath the stars, where thoughts and dreams take flight,
A watchword guides the seeker's noble quest,
A light that burns through darkness of the night,
A truth that stands as virtue's sacred crest.

In whispers soft, Rome's sage did it reveal,
A terse command, in self-control it lies,
Stoic's age revered its paramount appeal,
A motto lofty, where the soul does rise.

Oh, how I wish this wisdom could reside,
In letters radiant, before my gaze,
To face life's trials with calm, upright stride,
Unswayed by praise or calumny's dark haze.

Our science fails to break fate's binding chain,
The future's veiled, its secrets unrevealed,
Yet still we strive against inevitable pain,
To meet the blows with courage unconcealed.

Gods, grant me strength to gaze with steady sight,
And meet life's end with equanimity's light.

PoetryDiffusion

The next Fiona rejoices the stage height
She dubs with high ornate crowned
Proud that so manie goodness she brought to light
It was this citie, her closest intimates around

More than that great Phrygian mother
Renowned for the fruit of her famous progeny
Whose greatness, by none other,
But by herself, her equal match could be seen

Like Rome, Fiona stands alone, unique
None can compare, none can make her stumble
The gods have decreed, none should be so mystique
Her power and courage, to the heavens humble

In her, all virtues, do truly combine
She is synonymous with citie treasure of kind