... llied the constitutionality of the preference given to financial creditors over operational creditors, citing the fundamental right to equality under Article 14 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court dismissed the Article 14 argument, stating that there was a difference in the relative importance of financial creditors because repayment of debt allows the capital to be re-injected into the economy and is vital for economic growth. # The preference given to financial creditors is troubling, given the judicial system's dismal record on enforcing contracts. Operational creditors, while not direct lenders of money to the company, provide goods on credit and these contractual arrangements can often be more useful to a business than bank debt. But enforcing these unsecured contracts in Indian courts is a long and hard process which often leaves operational creditors without remedy. It is time for the judicial system to step up and expedite the enforcement of contracts. Similar to the time-bound insolvency resolution in the IBC, all con

The court may grant this request where the evidence obtained from such an examination would be relevant to an issue in the trial. Due to the nature of sexual assault cases, such examinations would be relevant the vast majority of the time. # As with any civil lawsuit, once all the evidence has been presented to the court by both parties and the trial has concluded, the judge will determine which party they will enter a judgement in favour of. If a judgement is entered for the defendant this means the court was not convinced that the allegations made by the plaintiff likely occurred. In this case the defendant will not be required to pay damages to the plaintiff for the alleged injuries they suffered. Should the court decide for the plaintiff, they will award either all of part of the damages requested by the plaintiff and order the defendant pay these damages. The court will also award
